

INFORMED CONSENT for CLASS RECORDINGS

The Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act of 1974 (FERPA), as amended, was designed, in part, to protect the privacy of educational records. Your coursework and the fact that you are taking a particular class are considered private. In an effort to move to an online academic platform, the use of Zoom, WebEx, and other electronic platforms is required.

By signing below, you hereby expressly grant permission for the Brigham Young University (hereinafter "BYU"), and/or any person(s) or entities authorized on BYU's behalf, to record your participation in University coursework transmitted via Zoom, WebEx, or other electronic platform and waive your right of nondisclosure of these records under federal law only for this purpose. Such recordings may consist of audio, video, or any combinations thereof. You understand that the class session will be viewed live by other class students and a recording may be made available at a later date for students and instructors of other sections and classes to review, or for other educational purposes.

Further, you understand that this recording is being made by BYU for educational purposes, and shall be used for educational purposes only. You grant permission for BYU, and any other person or entity authorized by BYU, to make copies in any form or media of the recording made of you and described above, including digitized copies or written transcriptions.

Further, you understand that you are not required to consent. Opting out of this opportunity will not impact your grade, credit earned, or be viewed unfavorably. Additional information about protecting student privacy and personally identifiable information is available on the BYU Registrar's web-page, <https://enrollment.byu.edu/registrar/records-privacy-ferpa>.
